

Comparing financial aid awards

If you've been accepted by more than one school, compare their award letters to decide which school is offering you the best financial aid package.

An award letter will usually show the total cost of attendance for one year: tuition, fees, room, meals, books, supplies, transportation and personal expenses. It may also show your EFC, which is how much you're expected to pay for your education. The EFC is subtracted from the total cost of attendance to get your financial need.

The letter will list the types and amounts of financial aid you've been offered. You can accept or reject any or all of those proposed sources.

On page 45, you'll find a School and Package Comparison chart. Use this chart to compare the cost of two schools and the financial aid packages those schools sent you. We've filled in one column with sample numbers that don't come from a real school. Let's take a look at the sample column to see how it's done.

First of all, these are the assumptions we're making: You'll be taking a full load of classes (at least 12 credit hours) and your EFC is $750.

Your total cost of attendance is the sum of your tuition and fees, books and supplies, room and board, transportation and personal expenses, or $13,750 for one year. Since your EFC is $750, your financial need is $13,750 minus $750, or $13,000. The college uses that information to put together a financial aid package for you.

You qualify for a Federal Pell Grant and a College Access Program Grant. You've earned $250 in KEES awards for your ACT score. You also qualify for a $5,250 subsidized Direct Loan, meaning the federal government pays the interest on the loan while you're in college. Your financial aid awards total $13,000.

You still have to come up with the $750 for your EFC, however. If you can pay that out of your pocket, that's the way to go.

You should see if you qualify for any local scholarships and if your employer has a tuition reimbursement plan. As a last resort you might want to consider a private student loan.

Remember: You don't have to accept everything in the financial aid package. You can choose the awards that are best for you. Take advantage of all the free financial aid you're offered — the grants and scholarships. If you still need help, take the loans — but only what you absolutely need.

You may be able to appeal your financial aid package. State and federal programs generally have limits on how much you can receive, but many schools have their own funds. If you really want to go to a particular school but the financial aid package isn't quite what you want, talk with someone in the financial aid office. The school may be able to come up with additional funds.

Ask the financial aid office:

- ☐ If your award will be reconsidered if your financial situation changes.
- ☐ If you can expect roughly the same financial aid package each year or if it includes one-time-only awards.
- ☐ What the school expects the average student loan debt will be.

Tools for comparison

You'll need the award letters that you receive from colleges and the Student Aid Report (SAR) that you receive after filling out the FAFSA to fill out this chart. It will help you compare schools and financial aid packages. The sample column will give you an idea of how to fill in the needed information.

Sometimes more expensive schools have scholarships that will bring your out-of-pocket costs in line with other schools. So don't limit yourself; consider all your choices and compare.
