

Should you return to school?

The answer to that question depends on many factors. People have different reasons for going back to school:

- They want a better job.
- They want to set an example for their children.
- They've lost their job and need training for a new one.
- They simply love to learn.

If you decide to return to school, consider:

- How you'll pay for it.
- If more education will help you get a better job.
- Whether your employer will help with tuition.
- If you can balance family, work, school and other responsibilities.
- Whether you can give the time and energy your classes will require.

Share your plans with your family and employer, and ask about their concerns and if they will support you.

Adults often wonder if they will do well in courses. Don't worry: many adults do better in school because they're more committed to achieving their goals.

SCHEDULING OPTIONS

You can go to school full time or part time. Full-time attendance at colleges on a semester schedule is usually 12 credit hours for undergraduate students or 9 hours for graduate students.

Part-time students are often eligible for less financial aid than full-time students, so you need to consider how much you can pay out of your own pocket.

You also need to consider your work schedule. Some schools advise students who work more than 20 or 30 hours per week not to enroll full time.

How much time you can spend studying is another question. Generally, you should allow two hours of study for each hour you're in class. If you can, you may want to take one class at first to get a feel for what's required.

SCHOOL SUPPORT DESIGNED FOR YOU

Many schools have special services for adult students. School websites should tell you what services are available and which office to contact. Most schools have a financial aid office that can help you complete financial aid forms and will offer you a financial aid package based on your need.

Adults Returning to School will help you become familiar with the many sources of assistance and opportunities for you to achieve your educational goals.

NOT SURE WHAT YOU WANT TO DO?

If you need help choosing a career, ask yourself:

- What am I good at?
- What subjects did I like in high school?
- What are my favorite hobbies or activities?
- Do I like to work with people, animals or machinery?
- Do I like working indoors or outside?

OTHER SOURCES OF JOB INFORMATION

To learn more about jobs, you may want to:

- Talk with people who earn their living in jobs that interest you.
- See if your public library has books about jobs that interest you or how to choose a career.
- Check "Help Wanted" ads in your area.
- Contact the Kentucky Career Center, which has dozens of offices throughout the state. Visit kcc.ky.gov/Pages/Locations.aspx to find the location nearest you.
- Talk with a counselor at an Educational Opportunity Center (EOC) or career assessment center. Contact information for career assessment centers is on page 3. EOC contact information is on page 6.

Career assessment centers

Assessment counselors at many Kentucky community and technical colleges can help you identify careers you might be interested in pursuing. Your counselor also can help you develop a plan to reach your career goal.
